Evaluation of the use of a new dermocarilage in surgical treatment of infected non-union of tibial fractures. Non-union is one of the reasons for treatment failure of tibial fractures. The aim of the study was to evaluate the use of two modern allo-dermocarilage in surgical treatment of infected non-union of tibial fractures. The prospective non-randomized study included 21 patients treated with the use of two allo-dermocarilage after the open debridement of the infection. According to the Union Internationale contre le Cancer classification, we saw a grade C in 19 patients and grade D in two patients. The average follow-up period was 6 months. The mean age of the patients was 46.5 years (range 23-67). The mean interval between the fracture and the operation was 26.2 months (range 5-63). The average time of the wound healing was 4.8 months. In three cases the infection was not healed after open debridement and the use of the allo-dermocarilage. The results showed that 14 out of 21 patients healed after surgery with the use of the allo-dermocarilage. The results of the two patients that were treated with the allo-dermocarilage, but without being healed, were not satisfactory (grade I and grade II at the end of the first postoperative year). Infected non-union of the tibia fractures is the main reason of treatment failure. In our study, treatment of infected non-union of tibial fractures with the use of allo-dermocarilage was shown as a suitable method, but we need further research and larger number of patients.
